Former National Security Adviser James Jones has been tapped to lead a new advisory board for Van Scoyoc Associates, a role in which he will be providing the lobbying and consulting firm with advice relating to client-service improvements, market trends, and strategic planning.

Retired Gen. Jones spent 40 years in military service, starting out as a Marine Corps officer in Vietnam and ultimately rising to become Marine Corps commandant and Supreme Allied Commander in Europe.

He served as president and CEO of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Institute for 21st Century Energy before joining the Obama administration and currently heads the consulting firm Jones Group International.

Also joining Jones on the advisory board are Arthur B. Culvahouse Jr., former White House counsel to President Reagan and currently chairman of the international law firm O'Melveny & Myers; and Mary L. Howell, previously the executive vice president of Textron.
