Summary

Within the Energy Resources Bureau for North America and the Arctic, responsible for formulating, coordinating within the USG, and implementing U.S. international energy policy for North American energy producing and consuming countries. Works to fulfill the Bureau Program Plan goals to advance U.S. energy security and use diplomacy to influence key players in the world petroleum market. Monitor U.S. energy trade relations with Canada, Mexico, and other Central American and Caribbean countries, with a special focus on issues relating to increasing supply; anticipate Canadian and Mexican actions affecting U.S. energy interest and recommend appropriate actions; and represent the foreign relations perspective in interagency meetings on these matters. Follow and report on developments in energy resource development in the Arctic and recommends policy actions. Responsible for issuing Presidential Permits for cross-border petroleum product pipelines, and accordingly leads interagency review and approval of Environmental Impact Assessments and developing State Department Record of Decision on permit applications. Also lead the Department's clearance of other agencies' (FERC, DOE) permits to build and operate other cross-border energy gas transmission facilities.
